? The Lanesville Board of School Trustees agreed Tuesday (June 17) to allow the Harrison County Tobacco Prevention and Cessation Coalition to take a survey of Lanesville school students this fall.

The Youth Tobacco Survey is taken every even numbered year, in grades 6 through 12.

Program Coordinator Jennifer Riley said that only two to five classrooms would be needed for the survey, and added that the survey takes only about an hour.

Riley said, "Recent surveys show a decrease in youth smoking rates. The cigarette tax last year has helped a lot."

Riley added that Harrison County was among the first counties in the state to go tobacco free in all of its school districts (3).

In the 2006 survey, the percentage of smoking in grade 11 is 29 percent, and in grade 12 is 29 percent.

Overall, the smoking rate among youth has dropped since 2000. The smoking rate for grades 6 to 8 was 9.8 percent in 2000, and had dropped to 7.8 percent by 2006. In grades 9 to 12, the 2000 rate was 31.6 percent, and that had dropped to 23.9 percent by 2006.

According to information provided by the Harrison County Tobacco Prevention and Cessation Coalition, more than 10,200 Indiana youth become smokers each year.
